

12th of October

In support of Indigenous Resistance and Against Neocolonialism

We have to accompany all the struggles, we must feel, my friends, once and for all that the other is me, and that's what the kids said every day.

"Mom, when people understand that the people is them, just then we will move forward."

The other is me!

The protester is me,

the revolutionary is me,

I am the one who is taking over the factories,

I am those who do not eat,

we are all me, these and others, we come and go!

12 October day of Indigenous Resistance and against Neocolonialism

The commemoration of the arrival of Christopher Columbus to the shores of the Americas on October 12, 1492 remains a matter of interpretation and controversy. The cultural heirs of the European conquerors consider this the beginning of "civilization" in these lands. But for indigenous people it was the beginning of a war of extermination which imposed a colonial regime, to which they have opposed directly or underground. 12 October reminds us today that the old forms of colonialism still exist, sometimes with the same face, sometimes masked. 12 October reminds us today that indigenous peoples, alongside peasants, workers, unemployed, landless, and homeless people continue to oppose to the concentration of wealth in the hands of few and propose radical changes in the distribution of political, economic, social and cultural power.
